INTERNATIONAL

Project Manager for Security / Justice / Policing projects

Adam Smith International wishes to recruit a full-time Project Manager to contribute to the management of ASI's technical assistance projects in developing countries which focus on strengthening institutions within the justice, policing or security sectors. The role will comprise technical oversight of ongoing projects, financial and administrative support of those projects, recruitment of associate consultants, managing donor relationships, and the development of new business through marketing and proposal preparation. The role will be based in London with frequent travel to project locations including countries emerging from and affected by conflict.

Candidates should have technical expertise in justice or security issues gained through experience either in developed countries or technical assistance projects in developing countries, and a strong understanding of the actors, mechanisms and best practices of international development. Candidates should have a demonstrated ability to build productive relationships with persons from a wide range of professional and cultural backgrounds, to manage several streams of activity at once, to work effectively in politically sensitive and physically challenging environments, and to solve complex problems through their own initiative.

CVs and cover letters should be sent to Myles.Bush@AdamSmithInternational.com before the 15th of August.
